By Joshua Laud The Microsoft Office Suite contains a set of widely used productivity applications. Microsoft Word is text processing software and Microsoft Excel is spreadsheet management software. While there is no standard way to export word data to Excel because both file types serve different purposes, you can easily copy a table or other separate data from a Microsoft Word document and import them into Excel. Open the Microsoft Word document that contains the table you want to copy. Mouse on the table so that the square four-pointer icon appears at the top left of the table. Click the pointer icon to select all data in the table. Press Ctrl-C on the keyboard. Alternatively, click Edit, and then click Copy to copy the data to the system clipboard. Open Microsoft Excel and create a new document by clicking File and New if an existing document is not yet open. Click the cell where you want the table to start. Press Ctrl-V on the keyboard or click Edit, and then click Paste to paste the data you copied from Word into the Excel document. Open the Microsoft Word document that contains the data you need to copy in Excel. Separate the data by pressing tab. Separate all data with tabs. Click File and select Save As. Click the Format drop-down menu and choose Plain Text (txt) from the list. Click File, and then click Import. Choose Text File, find the exported Word text file, and then click Get Data. Click Next in the Text Import Wizard. In the Delimiter options, check Tab if it is not yet checked. Click Finish. Choose a location for imported data in Excel worksheet, and then click OK. The data will be imported into Excel. Last update on October 12, 2020 The success of our day depends heavily on the quality of our planning.
